The law is shaped by principles and ideals but exists in a world complicated by relationships, geography, resources, and an infinite number of variables. Navigating this complex array to provide clear and accurate legal advice is what I strive to do for my clients. At the same time, I seek to understand my client and their goals thoroughly so that my advice is tailored to their specific needs.

On a personal and professional level, I am greatly influenced by an interest in rural people and places. I grew up in a farm town of 500 people, where I gained an appreciation for small businesses, community organizations, and the power of personal relationships. My passion for all things local led me to West Michigan where I get to represent clients that shape places like my hometown. If I am not in the office or at home, there is a good chance you can find me in a map-dot town—maybe in your neck of the woods—at a museum, hiking, catching a rodeo, and exploring all the interesting things the world has to offer.
